Dear Hilda:

This letter is to thank you for your consulting efforts during the past two months. We set out to achieve four difficult objectives and largely succeeded with these points. To your credit, though, you recognized after we started that there was a greater need in two corporate areas that needed immediate attention—a consulting process, and our need to diversify our client base—and developed a program to remedy these two areas.

Your explanation of a successful consulting process, along with examples of communications to record the details and the delivery of a consulting project, were the foundation we needed to better organize Inquesta as a consulting firm.

Regarding marketing, your relentless drive, resources and salesmanship led to acquiring an important new banking client that we believe will serve to expand Inquesta's client base and consulting engagements in the banking industry. This, together with our new consulting process, made our engagement a success.

I look forward to finding new opportunities to continue developing a mutually beneficial business relationship as business associates.

Sincerely,
